If you have any question feel free to contact me. We've known it was coming. Whether it would arrive this summer or next spring. It's here. Ready or not, the Affordable Care Act's major insurance reforms—the most significant since the 1960s—are here to stay. On Friday, the U.S. Supreme Court, in the two major insurance cases heard so far, threw the rug out from under insurance companies' arguments against the law, declaring: "We agree with the millions of Americans who have signed up for coverage under the law's exchanges." The rulings are very good news. We won't see the true impact of the Affordable Care Act for a few years, but already the law is beginning to deliver some of the major reforms it was designed to deliver: it's boosting coverage and taking money from premiums to expand care. It is the law of the land now, and although it may not be popular, it's not going away, either. Most important, however, is what the court rulings mean
